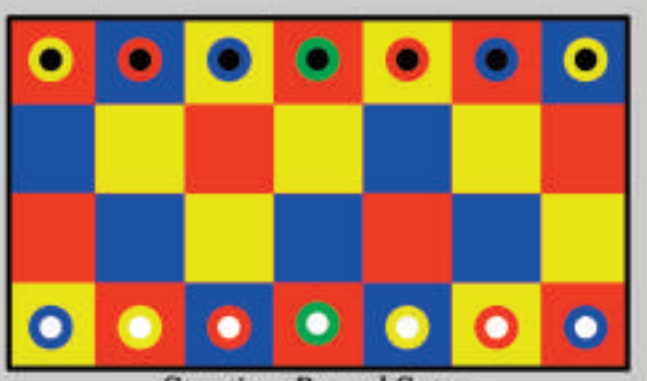
PRELLUS

2 players of all ages.
10-30 minutes per game.
By Sean Robert Johnson.

Game Setup

Prellus is played on a 4x7 grid of red, yellow, and blue square basins. Each player controls seven pawns (one green and two each of red, blue and yellow). Pawns are designated with plastic pieces for one player, and wooden pieces for the other. The pawns begin the game in a standard formation on the board.



Starting Board Setup

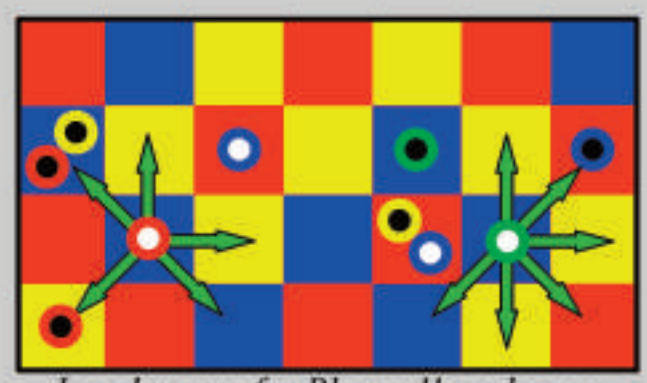
Piece Movement

Players alternate turns in Prellus, moving a single one of their pawns during each of their turns. Any number of pawns may occupy the same square. Pawns are never removed from the board.

Pawns move just one space at a time in any direction horizontally, vertically, or diagonally.

A pawn may not be moved into a square that is its color. For example, a blue pawn may not be moved into a blue square, but can move freely into a yellow or red square. The board has no green squares, so a green pawn may move into any square on the board.

A green pawn may not be moved into a square that is already occupied by two or more pawns, or by the opponent's green pawn.



Legal moves for Player 1's red pawn and green pawn shown. Other pieces and moves omitted for illustration.

Winning the Game

The first player to "smother" the opponent's green pawn is the winner. A green pawn is smothered when the square it is in is occupied by ANY two other pawns.
